Todays Organ Music

Organ Prelude: J.S. Bach (1685-1750): Praeludium in a Minor for organ BWV 551

Organ Postlude: J.S. Bach (1685-1750): Praeludium in a Minor for organ BWV 551

'A Bachian orphan': probably this Praeludium is the most neglected among all the free standing organ works by Bach. As the 'paternity' seems now established, this is probably one of the early (if not the earliest) works dated around 1703-1706, after Bach returned from his 300-mile trip on foot to Lubeck in the north of Germany, in order 'to comprehend one thing or another' about Buxtehude's art. In this music Bach already speaks Buxtehude's musical language very fluently and the contrapuntal skill manifested here together with the imaginative balance, warrants a second chance for this early work. Ironically (or perhaps not) in Bach's organ works catalog this Praeludium sits next to BWV 552, which is considered to be one of his highest musical achievements dedicated to the worship of God. More about it, next Sabbath.
