Organ Prelude: J.S. Bach (1685-1750): Organ Chorale “Christ the Hope of All Word”. BWV 670

Organ Postlude: J. S. Bach (1685-1750): Organ Chorale “We Believe in One God”, BWV 680

The three pieces, of which this ‘Christ Hope of the World’ is the second piece, are composed around the long melodies of a ‘trope’: a standard hymn with extra texts. Each piece is devoted to one facet of the Trinity, whereby Bach gives a symbolic place to the cantus firmus (the existing melody): first to God the Father in the soprano; then to God the Son among the voices in the tenor, and finally to God the Holy Ghost in the pedal bass.

The Chorale on “We Believe in One God” is both exuberant and triumphal. Bach ignored the long chorale melody for the larger part. Luther’s melody first line, to which the words ‘we believe in one God’ are sung, were more than enough for him. He formed it into a jubilant theme, in which a buoyant downward leap generates a festive string of semiquavers. The material forms the basis for a spirited fugue that assures the listener that only one thing matters: faith.
